The Dereks wonder: Is CIA watching us?

Film star Bo Derek and her husband, producer-director John Derek, contacted the FBI after being told by a man since convicted of fraud that they were under covert surveillance.

Ronald R. Rewald was convicted in October of fraud, perjury and tax evasion charges tied to the $22 million collapse of his phony investment counseling firm.

Bo Derek, in an affidavit, said Rewald told her while he was free on bail that he headed 66 companies used by the CIA. Rewald was meeting with the Dereks to arrange film financing.

"Rewald strongly implied he was still working with the CIA but no longer as an employee, and that those 66 companies and his ability to make money available for our films were interrelated," she said.

Remarks about unseen people "watching our activities, scared me and angered my husband. Because of this we contacted the FBI," she said.
